

Building your own Extra Tough Farm First Aid kit

The following resource will guide you in making your own farm first aid kit; it will include the online link to buying these products. This kit will include materials that accommodate to the wear and tear of farming.

This kit is important to maintaining the physical well-being of the worker as well as keeping to hygienic practices for farming. Open wounds are prone to higher infection and contaminating produce. Taking preventative measures such as making your own farm first aid kit is a responsible move to ensuring the safety of your workers and farm. The Food Safety Modernization Act (FSMA) requires fully subject farms to have their employees, “Maintain adequate personal cleanliness to protect against contamination of covered product and food contact surfaces.” (112.32 Produce Rule) An important way to stop the spread of contamination is for employees to properly clean and dress any cuts or wounds, especially those on their hands. This kit provides examples of bandages, wraps, and finger cots/gloves that will prepare your farm well to adequately protect cuts from spreading contamination.
